ROBERT BURNS Mr. Toastmaster;--Ladies and Gentlemen;--I have received a very kind invitation to come to this banquet to-night: --It was to talk to the emigrant exiles of Scotland about Robert Burns. So much has been said of him in the last hundred years that Scotchmen as well as others have the Rurns habit. People and critics say over and over: --what a poet Burns was, and what a pity he had so many faults as a man. Now it is a universal custom for people when they meet their friends in good weather, to tell them what a pleasant day it is--only it looks like rain after a little. This is because such a day is one of nature s richest gifts: --common as it is we cannot help talking about it. But suppose we had lived in some icy region of the...
