The creamy ground was evidence in all cases. I regard all of the so-called sets of this bird showing black marks on a white ground as unquestionably sets of the Maryland Yellow-throat. THE CONNECTICUT WARBLER--Geothlypis agilis. This Warbler is more retiring in disposition and habits than the Mourning, and hence even more difficult to locate while nesting. Here in Monroe county, -N. Y., I noted a pair I felt certain were breeding last summer, but after repeated efforts I gave up the search for the nest and had to satisfy myself with the skin of the male bird as evidence. On the 30th of May, this year, I accidentally stumbled on to the only set of this bird s eggs I have ever been fortunate enough to see. I was crossing an opening in a large swamp...
