HILDEGARDES NEIGHBORS

Hardpress Publishing. Paperback. Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. 120 pages. Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 0.2in.Excerpt: . . . more than you ever dreamed of in all your life before. I wish I could describe things, but you know I cant, so you wont expect it. But one thing I will tell you, if youll promise not to tell any living soul- Stop, my dear! said Mrs. Grahame, quickly. We must not touch upon the boys confidences. Head that part to yourself. Thank you, maam! said Hilda. This mark of trust is most gratifying, I assure you. Not tell any living soul except your mother, dear. Now how do you feel, madam Dear Jack! said Mrs. Grahame, softly. Dear lad! of course I shall like to hear it. Go on, Hilda, and I promise not to interrupt again. The day after the last concert-it was only day before yesterday, but it seems an age-I went to take my lesson, and my master was not there. He is often late, so I just took out some music and began to play over the things I had studied. There was a sonata of Rubinsteins, very splendid, that has quite possessed me lately. I played that, and I suppose I forgot where I was and all about it, for I went on and on, never hearing a sound except just the music. You must hear it when I come back, Hilda. It begins in the minor, and then there is the most superb sweep up into the major; your heart seems to sweep up with it, and you find yourself in another world, where everything is divine harmony. Im talking nonsense, I know, but that piece just sends me off my head altogether. Well, at last I finished it and...
