Excerpt: . . . and that just in this feature lay the power and originality of His plan. Christ, he says, claimed to be Founder, Legislator, and Judge of a new divine Society. To deny that Christ did intend to found a divine Society is only possible to those who altogether deny the credibility of the extant biographies of Christ. And the object of this divine Society was that Gods will may be done on earth as it is done in heaven. 1 1 Ecce Homo, pp. 40, 41, 89. A short defence of these views will be found in the Preface to the Fifth Edition of the work, pp. vii-ix. On the other hand, it is a characteristic of a widely represented school of Church historians to eliminate altogether this idea of a Society from the work of Christ. It is noticeable, for example, in Harnacks recent work on the Essence of Christianity as in his History of Christian Dogma. It is laid down as an axiom by Sohm in his book on Church Law, and is developed with a fearless logic by Professor Schmiedel. In so far, the latter maintains, as religion consists in a relation of the devout heart to God, everything of the nature of a constitution is foreign to its nature. At the beginning of Christianity no constitution of the Church existed. It would be a great mistake to suppose that Jesus himself founded a new religious community. 1 Now in a sense...
