Lines of creamy foam flow up the sand and back, Leaving white flakes of shell Like scattered white rose petals, And tiny crystal jellyfish, And strands of dark sea moss, Locks of dend mermaids hair. The light comes through the fog diffused and silver gray. It is as if I stood in the heart of a moonstone. Out beyond are invisible legions of breakers Singing exultant ceaseless chants Through the fog. Eleanor Hammond. A MEMORY Of all the fragrance thy presence stirred. Of all the songs that we, together, heard, More than all else, in my mind will remain The scent of wet earth under falling rain. Mande Biirbank Harding. I USED TO PRAY Long ago I used to pray, Dropping on my knees Beside the broad old cherry bed. All night...
