Rock s Mills Press, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . An evocative post-apocalyptic vision of loss, love and redemption . Last man on earth--I m beginning to fantasize that. The last human survivor! Seems very unlikely, in a world inhabited by so many millions of people in so many cities, so many countries. But in this silence--who knows? Actually, I think it s the silence, and my deepening sense of isolation, that are encouraging me to think I may be alone, completely alone. --But how will I find out for sure, now that radio and TV and newspapers and the Internet and of course social media have all gone? So, don t even think about it! If I am the last, there s nobody out there to care! Keep active, exercise--think and write. No returned books to re-shelve now--or very few, the final few. However, I always did find pleasure and some company, or illusion of company, in books--and in my own writing, those unpublished poems and short stories piled up in my closet at home! So now here I am taking refuge again in the comfort of words? Beloved words! Of course nobody will read the ones I write now, almost certainly they won t. So who am I writing them for? Myself, I guess. My other self. The urge to communicate remains, remains to the end?--even if only with oneself. So begins Librarian, a compelling short novel of survival and the search for meaning. Compelling characters and thought-provoking meditations on the meaning of philosophy and literature in a world gone wrong make Librarian a book you won t put down--and won t soon forget. To live through a devastating event, to become isolated from one s fellow humans and...
