LECTURE VI THE ACTS OF JUDAS THOMAS AND THE HYMN OF THE SOUL The art of telling a tale is perhaps the most wonderful of all human inventions, and the East has ever been famous for story-telling. We shall therefore not be surprised to find that the most striking and original piece of Syriac Literature is a Novel. By a curious chance, which I suspect would prove to be, if we knew more, less a chance than an intimate literary connexion, this Novel contains within it an independent Poem which itself is the most beautiful production not of Syriac Literature only, but I venture to assert of all the literary activity of the early Church. The Novel is the Acts of Judas Thomas, the Apostle of India: the Poem is known to modern scholars as the Hymn of the Soul. The work called the Acts of Thomas in one form or another has long been familiar to hagiographers and ecclesiologists. When you see a stained glass window with S. Thomas depicted N 198 in it, he will probably be represented with a spear in his hand. That is because according to these Acts the apostle was martyred with spears. In a sense, therefore, the story of S. Thomas is no new discovery. But it is only lately that it has been recovered in approximately its original form, and it is only lately that it has been recognised as a story which is Syriac...
