Excerpt from Lady Trent's Daughter: A Novel Miss arden had just laid aside her knitting, because it was getting too dark to see com fortably, and also she did not wish to miss the sunset, as she expressed it. It had been her habit to watch it for the last five and twenty years, when ever, indeed, a visible sun had been there to set behind the aunt stark range of Cotswold, Hills which reare themselves in front of the three long windows of the library at Nether Cheldon Manor. The evening had followed upon a perfectly lovely day in early June. The morning had begun with a thick white mist that had clung tenaciously, even after the sun had risen and disclosed the clear outline of the bills, to the villa e of Nether Chel don that la down in the ho ow of the valley below the anor House. It had enveloped it in deed rather like a snug winter blanket, and had revealed with its filmy trailing scarf of ossamer the narrow and twisting course of the Che 1....
