Ball State University, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . The Creative Writing in the Community is a course at Ball State University in Muncie, Indiana. An immersive, service learning opportunity, English 409 students meet with young writers in the greater Muncie community to teach creative writing techniques and to write and compose a collaborative text. Our young community partners are 3rd and 4th graders, at Longfellow Elementary School. This semester, university students also engaged in the book publishing process, learning design, layout, and editing with our independent, 409 Press, which is committed to publishing young Muncie voices. Our essential and guiding element was that it is an honor to be trusted with someone s story. And our role was to honor our young community writer s voices so the rest of the world can hear the simple, yet poignant and sometimes humorous wisdom and stories that only young people and young writers possess. A discovery my Ball State students and I made during this semester is that young writers haven t learned to filter. They don t yet know what society teaches us about not sharing or revealing too much about...
