This is best applied in the form of radiant heat; but where special apparatus is not available, an ordinary oven or open fire may be used. Lovett uses a large sheet of asbestos in which a hole is cut and the limb put through into a moderately heated oven, or close to an open fire, the asbestos protecting the patient s body from ther heat. A warm bath just before the time for massage relaxes the muscles and joints and makes subsequent manipulation more effective. Hot water is a less desirable form of heat, as it makes the skin tender and cannot be borne at as high a temperature as can the dry heat. At the present time the value of electricity in the after treatment of infantile paralysis is being questioned by many authorities....
