Excerpt from Science-Gossip, Vol. 5: An Illustrated Monthly Record of Nature, Country-Lore and Applied Science; Oct., 1898 It must be evident to anyone who will logically consider the subject that, if the survival of the fittest be the one test by which species exist. And that all species have been brought about by a gradual and almost imperceptible transition from other species, the change which takes place and becomes fixed in the species, i.a. The Specific character, and which separates it from its immediate ancestor, must be a change that will be useful to the species. Therefore, the presence of useless specific characters, so-called, is more likely to be due to our failure to understand their use, rather than to any likelihood of their actual uselessness.
