Createspace, United States, 2009. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Constantine Vlacmose was anything, but weird. How could a weird man hold down a responsible job like his, a job that called for the utmost stability, mental clarity, intestinal fortitude, fearlessness, well, you get the idea now. You don't think being a cabbie in New York City is easy, do you! You try dealing with the crowded streets, the thousands of cars, buses, and trucks, two million on-rushing pedestrians, blaring noise, accidents, cops, firefighters, and assorted other distractions. Easy, are you joking! From: Are You An Ass, A Fool, Or A You-Know-What? It was a good interview, the television news personality declared to Jay Pripnet, the person he'd just interviewed. Thank you for your help. The segment should air in about two weeks. I'm certain we'll get a good response. Jay Pripnet extended his hand to the voice of the man who he couldn't see. No, no, no, he answered in reply. Let me thank you for helping get the message out that, in this age of technology, blind people no longer are helpless, that they can perform many of today's jobs as well as sighted people. From: A Soul Melting in the Darkened Sun So begins two of Elias Sassoon's short stories in Sassoon's Sketches For A Saturday Afternoon.
