Excerpt: . cuttings on either side (for the side-heights there is, of course, a cutting only on one side). From the sum of the quantities obtained, deduct that given by entering the diagram with the sum of the side-heights and the sum multiplied by  $r$ . Also, for each solid, enter the diagram with the cutting at the apex of each triangular surface-plane and with the length of the base of the triangle in the other end-section. From the sum of the quantities obtained, deduct that given by entering the diagram with the sum of the side-heights of one end-section, and the sum multiplied by  $r$ , of the other. Then the total volume of each solid, for a length of 100 feet, is given by adding together the quantities for the end-sections and for the solid. When one end-section is three-level, as must frequently be the case, the quantity for each section obtained as above is equal to the quantity equation (22), + 16.7, the difference between of the solidity of the grade-prism (50 yards), which is actually deducted in equation (21), and of that solidity (66.7 yards), which strict theory requires to be deducted. Also, when Plate X. is in use, by the rule of paragraph 109, for another road-bed than 18 feet, the quantity 8, as taken off must be corrected by two-thirds only of the correction in Table II. (plus 16.7 as before) to have it equal to the quantity obtained as above:...
