Excerpt from Survey of the Moral and Religious Forces in the Military Camps and Naval Stations in the United States, May 1, 1918 In December, 1917, the General War-Time Commission of the Churches published a survey of the moral and religious forces in the National Army and the National Guard camps of the country. This preliminary statement seemed to fill a much-felt need and requests came for the issuing of a more comprehensive survey that should cover the whole field confronting the religious forces in their efforts to serve our enlisted men. This booklet, therefore, aims to be a helpful manual of information for those engaged in directing the war-time work of the various religious bodies. Perhaps it may be of interest to others also as setting forth in a concrete way something of the service that the religious forces of our country are rendering in this time of unparalleled opportunity and need. The effort has been made to present a survey that should include not only all the large military camps and naval stations of the country, but also, so...
