Excerpt: The Dun Mountain Railway was a privately owned and operated gauge, 21 km long horse-drawn tramway from chromite mines in the vicinity of Duppa Lode on the eastern slopes of Wooded Peak to Nelson port in the Tasman District of New Zealand's South Island. It operated from 3 February 1862 to 30 May 1901, with the last mineral traffic on the incline section operated in January 1866. This line was the first railway to be opened and operated in New Zealand, preceding the first public railway and the first railway to be operated by steam trains, the line between Ferrymead and Christchurch, which opened on 1 December 1863. The city of Nelson had the first city tramway to both open and close in New Zealand. Prominent advocates for the mining of mineral deposits found on Wooded Peak was a syndicate formed by William Long Wrey, William Travers and William Wells. In the winter of 1853 a large deposit of chromite was discovered high on Wooded Peak by a local runholder, George Duppa. It was named the Duppa Lode, but considered to be of no commercial value at the time....
