Excerpt from Three French Moralists: And the Gallantry of France The object of these essays is to trace back to its source, or to some of its sources - for the soul of France is far too complex to be measured by one system - the spirit of gallantry which inspired the young French officers at the beginning of the war. We cannot examine too minutely, or with too reverent an enthusiasm, the effort of our great ally, and in this theme for our admiration there are many strains, some of which present themselves in apparent opposition to one another. The war has now lasted so long, and has so completely altered its character, that what was true of the temper of the soldiers of France in November 1914 is no longer true in April 1918. Confidence and determination are still there, there is no diminution in domestic intensity or in patriotic fervour, but the long continuance of the struggle has modified the temper of the French officer, and it will probably never be again what it was in the stress and tempest of sacrifice three years and a half ago, when the young French soldiers, ?ushed with the idealisms which they had imbibed at St. Cyr, rushed to battle like paladins, with a pure heart, in the rapture of chivalry and duty.
