Forgotten Books, 2018. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****. Excerpt from Byutah, 1913 Early four decades have passed, since the 16th day of October, 1875, when the Brigham Young Academy, now the Brigham Young University, held its opening session. Our first ten years were spent in Lewis Hall, a two-story brick building, which site is now occupied by the Farmers and Merchants Bank. Those who put time and money into the erection of that building had no idea that it would ever be used for a school. It was an amusement hall up stairs, with a stage at the end. Down stairs it was a dry goods store. When Dr. Maeser, with his two assistants, and his little band of earnest students, (the original twenty-nine), first invaded that building, they made the amusement hall a house of prayer by day, and at night dedicated it to lectures and wholesome amusements. The curtain was retained and the stage converted into a class room. Accounts from early students tell us that mice and bats held high carnival there by night, and not infrequently during the day, some mouse, braver than his fellows, would sally forth to the dismay of the ladies and utter destruction of discipline of the school. But all this was of small moment for the great teacher was there, as also a class of students with whom large exchange of soul was possible. Every decade of the history of the institution has produced good and efficient business men, but the first decade is marked by the presence of these persons who are first among our statesmen, college presidents, and lawyers. Senator Reed Smoot and Senator George Sutherland are of this number, also Judge William H. King, who served in...
