Excerpt: . . . of 66, 234 square feet, or 1. 52 acres. On a day with the temperature at zero, this surface will give out 17, 883, 180 heat units, equivalent to 537 H. P. , which means the burning of one ton of coal per hour, if direct steam be used. It is possible, however, to use exhaust steam from the engines and without appreciable back pressure to retard their action. This is accomplished by the Cryer Return Line System, which solves the problem of circulating exhaust steam for heating through such a large number of radiators and for such great distances without back pressure on the engines. This system is very simple: it consists of a Cryer valve placed on the return end of each radiator, connecting into the return piping, on which a vacuum is maintained by means of vacuum pumps in the engine room. The water of condensation and the air are drawn freely through the Cryer valves to the vacuum pumps, which discharge to an air-separating tank, where the air is liberated and the water placed in condition to be again used in the boilers. The Cryer valve holds the steam in the radiators until it is condensed, allowing ordy the water and air to pass into the return pipe, distinguishing absolutely between the three. It contains no springs, floats, or counterweights, or any parts requiring adjustment or attention. In fact, it has only one moving part, which is a heavy brass...
