Not illustrated. 1883 Excerpt: .burns longer the resistance of the circuit increases, the current thereby necessarily diminishes in strength, and the lifting power of the solenoid becomes less, allowing the iron core to drop a minute distance, just sufficient to clear the milled edge of nut N from the pall P, the nut turns round through a degree or so, which allows the carbon to drop a very small distance, the normal length of arc being in this way resumed. The above operation takes place so rapidly that the upper carbon is fed forward in almost perfect unison with the consumption, ensuring a steady light. From tests made of this lamp an actual, not nominal, candle power of 2250 candles, or 1450 candles per horse-power at the lamp, was obtained--the electricity being furnished by an A gramme dynamo. I would like here to explain and clear up an ambiguity which has arisen and which is very confusing to those not acquainted with electrical phraseology. When the expression, so many candles per electrical horse-power, or so many candles per horse-power expended in the lamp, is used, it is to be understood that the electrical energy absorbed by the lamp, and developed in the form of heat and light, is according to the formula, . (which we stated at the beginning of this paper, was an actual horse power of 33,000 foot pounds per minute). This takes no account whatever of the energy lost in transmission through the leading wires, or...
