Excerpt from The Giant s Strength As for Paula herself, she passed on, between her father and the man she had almost promised to marry, unmoved by the stir she created. She was aware of it, but she was used to it. Having been so constantly her father s companion during the last four years, she had come to take public attention as a matter of course. At first the interest she inspired had been impersonal - the interest inseparable from one whom the American press called the greatest heiress on earth. Her fortune was compared with that of the Queen of Holland, and of the daughters of the Rothschild and Rockefeller families, but that was all. Now, however, at twenty-two, she was emerging from the golden mist that had surrounded her, and was assuming personality. Theowering of her beauty had done something towards this. People had found it superuuous that a girl with so much money should have a complexion like rose-petals oating in milk. They resented the fact that her figure had needless grace, and her face an expression of appeal which there was no resisting. Rumors of marriage sprang up wherever she appeared. The girl knew these things without taking actual ac count of them, or letting them form part of her daily consciousness. At this minute she could ignore the fact that her looks were being criticised and her income appraised, in gazing about her, with amusement, at the novelty of the scene.
