Not illustrated. 1853 Excerpt: . . . BE YE THEREFORE PERFECT. With what perfection must we perfect be Is it enough to love and cherish those Who love and cherish us whose presence throws No shadow oer our spirits joyaunce free Is it enough our words and thoughts and prayers Of charity, to mete out equally To such alone as earn them: frugally Thus trafficking as with a merchants wares Not so, for this the very heathen do; We have another law, and would we be Our Fathers children, then, like Him, must we As on our good, so on our evil too, The sunshine of our patient love diffuse: And are not His, while this our hearts refuse. See Note 26. COUNT STEPHEN. COUNT STEPHEN. Not yet returned Well, we will wait him here. --Sit, friend, awhile; these cumbrous antique chairs Have charms for idlesse, though so all unlike Those thou hast lately graced, in bright saloons Of gay Vienna; for myself, I love Them well, for that so well these quaint old halls, With grim wood-carvings, windows strait and tall. And tusked boar-heads hung around, they grace. Oh! we are sure of welcome, stay thou must; I would not that on thine erratic course, Which thus a visitation comet-like Hath me vouchsafed, thou shouldst again depart Without a greeting from my friend; for him Unseen, Gustavus, thou but half canst guess The scope and charms of this new life of mine, Which doth so much, thou sayst, thy wonder...
