Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from The Finer Histological Changes in the Traumatic Degenerations of the Spinal Cord, Following Bullet Wounds of the Cord Substance, or Shock to the Vertebral Column On the opposite side a small localised disturbance situated on either side of a septum shows in a remarkable manner the effects of the concussion. (fig. 2 enlarged from A in Fig. Nerve fibres in various stages of degeneration are shown. In some instances the axis cylinders are only slightly swollen, and fill up completely their place in the sheath. In others they are larger and show minute deeply staining granules, and between the axis cylinder and the sheath there is frequently a large clear space due partly to the oedema, but principally to the falling out of the disintegrated myelin. In Fig. 3 one very large fibre is shown (300 diameters). In the centre of the fibre is the swollen axis cylinder, and this is surrounded by the degenerating myelin. Some debris partly fills the space around this mass. The whole is enclosed by glia structure, which is thicker than normal, and is broken in several places. Lying in the centre of the mass over the axis cylinder is a glia cell. The dark staining granules are probably fat. This condition of the fibre represents one of the stages in the formation of the myeloclast. Besides these changes in the fibres the glia also shows some interesting developments. As has already been mentioned there are numerous open spaces scattered through the section where the nerve fibre has fallen out. These spaces are surrounded by a glia structure which had previously formed the sheath of the nerve. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of...
