Crawford; Before the Lincoln Association of Jersey City, N. J., February 12, 1912 In that most remarkable opinion written by James Wilson, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, in which he gave the reasons upon which the Court based its decision in the case of Chisholm against the State of Georgia, rendered in 1792, he said the real question before the Court was: Do the people of the United States form a Nation? He observes also that in all our study of government we should not forget that it is not the artificial persons called states, but it is men who think, and speak, and act. He further observes that when Homer enumerates the other nations of Greece, whose forces acted at the siege of Troy, he arranges them under the names of their different kings or princes; but that he distinguished the Athenians by always referring to them as The People of Athens, and that Demosthenes stirred his countrymen most when he began his orations with...
