Not illustrated. 1906 Excerpt: .to emanate a gracious kindness from flashing smile, warm hand pressure, even the foreign intonation of her voice, that took on a caressing sweetness. A tall woman, slender and stately, with a touch of hauteur in the lift of her head; carrying her diamonds and the restrained richness of her garments with the unconscious grace of a creature born to rare plumage; and promptly I placed myself at the very head of that large class of women who are her admirers. Greetings exchanged, she drew aside, revealing her companion and presented Mr. Wilson Barrett, --an undersized man to my great surprise, for the uncounted photographs of his large well-formed head, particularly the Roman-nosed profiled ones, of which he was so proud, all suggested a man of goodly height. He was light in coloring, blue-eyed, and had the typical close shaven, plastic face of the actor--a face whose usual expression was, I imagine, one of cool imperturbability; of a person whom you have to undergo all the labors of their minds, they talk so wearisomely; but that night his face was heavy with a look of annoyance. He came forward and gave me a hearty grasp of the hand and a steady straight look from his eyes, but spoke no single word, and retreated instantly to the further side of Madame, as a refuge. A faint flush came to her cheek, but she made willing excuse, saying, he had met that evening with an experience so up-setting...
