Excerpt: . to a consideration of other decisions of the Supreme Court regulating other points of contact between the National and State governments. | 21 Howard, 506. 4 Wheat., 316. The restriction laid upon States regarding the violation of contracts, has given rise to important cases, the decisions in which, while of the gravest importance in constitutional law, and in their economic bearings, need not detain us long, as in them there were determined no novel points of especial importance bearing upon the proper relations to be maintained by the States towards the Union. The decisions have turned almost entirely upon the question of what constitutes a contract. In Fletcher v. Peck decided in 1810, a case arising in connection with the Yazoo Frauds, a state law was first broken, for being a violation of the sanctity of contracts. The case is also important as...
