The atmometer is an instrument evidently of extensive application and of great utility in practice. To ascertain with accuracy and readiness the quantity of evaporation from any surface in a given time, is an important acquisition, not only in meteorology, but in agriculture, and the various arts and manufactures. The rate of exhalation from the surface of the ground is scarcely of less consequence than the fall of rain, and a knowledge of it might often direct the farmer advantageously in his operations. On the rapid dispersion of moisture, depends the efficacy of drying houses, which are too frequently constructed most unskillfully, or on very mistaken principles. But the purposes to which the atmometer so aptly applies, were hitherto supplied in a rude and imperfect manner. The loss that water sustains in a given time from evaporation, has commonly been estimated by weight or measure. If a piece of flannel, stretched by a slender frame, be wetted and suspended in the free air, its dissipation of moisture, after a certain interval, is found by help of accurate scales; or if water in a shallow pan be exposed in a similar situation, its daily waste is detected by the application of a finely divided rod or gage. But these methods are extremely troublesome, and are subject besides, especially the latter one, to great inaccuracy. Both the flannel and the sheet of water require to be sheltered against the wind and rain, and consequently they will not...
