Forgotten Books, United States, 2016. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from The Assassin: A Tragedy in Four Acts Harold. Did you see his face? Was it not wonderful? Joe. His face? Of course I saw it. What should I be looking at, his uniform? Not but I saw that, too. He wears more gold of late. Harold. His face was noble; set with high resolve. Joe. A mask to cover his ambition up. Come, let s to work. Hold you this steadv. Harold. (still gazing into space.) I never can forget that face. It bore the dignity of other worlds. Joe. For my part I would rather see it in the fight, blackened with powder-smoke, and torn with fury. I like not warriors when they turn toward peace. Harold. He is our great dictator. Joe. Emperor, you should be saying. Harold. I do not fear the word. He is our emperor. Joe. Fools tongues are quick familiar with new words. Here, look at what you do. Harold. I see him there, so stately, mild, and calm, turning from fate of war to faith of peace. Joe. twere better you should see this nail I m driving. You re less apt to come out with a damaged thumb. As for heroes, if that s what you ve come to the city to see, why, you will have them on this stage in the course of an hour; just as big heroes as your Emperor, too. Did I not tell you, you would see Philip legrand? Harold. My father has often preached against the stage. Joe. As I have Often preached against your mother for marrying your father. Still, she did well enough. Harold. And, yet, I have Often longed to...
