Mr. Allen would have found these things bewildering, but he would have found other things saddening. He owned another house, a very old one, which must have been built a hundred years before, back in the days when Boston was still a village and Muddy River was given out in allotments to its citizens for pasturage. This house, which stood a little farther up Walnut street, on the same side, not far from the present Kennard road, was taken down three years after his death and from its stanch timbers a new one was built, to be the home of the Rev. Cotton Brown, Mr. Allen s successor, who had married his daughter. Before the house was finished, both the Minister and his wife were dead, he a year after her, April 1 3th, 1751, having had a ministry of only two years and a half. They were both buried in...
