Excerpt from The Christian Ministry and Its Fruits: A Sermon, Preached at the Installation of Rev. Horatio Alger, as Pastor of the West Church, in Marlborough, Mass., January 22, 1845 These words, interpreted by the help of the occasion which has brought us here, present us with a subject for Christian discourse. The duties and the feelings involved in these services, can find no better expression than in the hallowed sentences of Apostolic counsel. The first pastors of the Church are examples to their successors, in life, in doctrine, and in exhortation. In conformity with their institution, prayer and religious discourse will express the solemn and renewed consecration of our brother to the work which, by this Simple transfer of recognitions, has been perpetuated through long centuries. While the outward rite addresses the eye, the sacred lessons which lie beneath it and give it its signification, must be impressed upon the heart.
