STONES AND BONES: ITALY THROUGH MY EYES

Createspace. Paperback. Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. 120 pages. In 1996 I had the opportunity to travel to Italy with my mother, father and brother Vince. I spent two weeks in Sicily visiting my mothers side of the family and two weeks in Italy where I met my fathers relatives and visited Rome, Florence, Venice, Milan and points in-between. We went to my Sicilian cousins Summer home a few miles from the village where he lived. It was newly constructed and was basically one large room with a long table and chairs in it. It was not a place to live, it was a place to party. Outside was a huge double wide barbecue pit and various arrangements of tables and chairs. Exactly next door to it, on the other side of the driveway, was an old building that was in total ruin. It had no roof and was missing most of one wall and tops of the other walls. It had probably been bombed in WWII. There were vines growing on it and the vegetation around it was wild. I asked him, Are you going to tear that old building down He looked at me in amazement and said, Why Its not bothering anyone!When we went into Palermo, I saw other old buildings that looked abandoned and bruised, surrounded by tall new apartment buildings. (see page 23) One of the reasons I fell in love with my ancestral home was its reverence for the past. Italy is home to homes that are thousand of years old, built by the Greeks, and to modern homes that rise into the sky. Every period of history is represented architecturally from south to north. But unlike in other parts of the world, the past is not easily discarded, but revered...
