Not illustrated. 1914 Excerpt: . . . the valley smiles peacefully as before with a smile which strikes one as somewhat inane under such serious circumstances, and the woods still maintain that air of innocence which is beginning to arouse suspicion; and the pom-pom goes on perseveringly pumping lead at us, and hitting no one. For a time it is thrillingly exciting, every one speculates and watches for the flash, which in the dusk can be easily seen. But it is broad daylight now, all we can do is to search the dry river-bed and woods, with shrapnel planted carefully about in likely places on the chance of finding what we want. At first this is of absorbing interest and the heart leaps at every bo-o-o-om; but the heart cant go on leaping all day long, and as it is 2 p. m. the stomach is beginning to press its claims, and the...
