 Evas Choice
 Tender and true are memories that blend
 In later years with thought of school-day friends.
 The mist of passing years that intervene
 Cannot obscure those early friends and scenes;
 In restful, dreamy hours they yet are here,
 The same familiar voices still we hear.
 To me one tone, one best remembered face
 In vision comes, with sweet, accustomed grace;
 Her face aglow with inspiration given,
 Her eyes, we thought, gave spirit light from heaven.
 I see her now with modest triumph pass,
 Above us all, arranged in Students Class,
 No envious heart, pride wounded, suffered there;
 The prize was won by her, beloved and fair,
 On Evas drooping lash trembled a tear,
 Whether from joy or grief did not appear,
 Except to those who knew her nature best,
 Knew that twas tender pity for the rest.
 The school dismissed, the usual path we take,
 Glad if the Spring in freshness is awake.
 The beaten path, that leads to woodland shade
 Our eager feet have with much practice made,
 Or in the freshness of the summer green
 Near by a lake and pleasure boat...
