

Alcohol and the Unspoken Expectations Among American College Students

By Philipp Hinderberger

GRIN Verlag. Paperback. Book Condition: New. Paperback. 60 pages. Dimensions: 8.3in. x 5.8in. x 0.1in. Seminar paper from the year 2005 in the subject American Studies - Culture and Applied Geography, grade: B, The George Washington University, 6 entries in the bibliography, language: English, abstract: I am an international student from Germany; therefore, I suppose it was unavoidable that I would have to face some common stereotypes about Germans. Is it true that every German wears Lederhosen and Do all Germans eat Sauerkraut and drink beer all day were only two of the many questions I was asked shortly after moving to DC and meeting my fellow students. As I was thinking of a reasonable answer to these queries, I soon realized that I am not conforming to the stereotypes many people have about Germans. I've never worn lederhosen (leather trousers) before, nor do I like to drink beer. Nevertheless, I was born in Germany and am, therefore, German. This contradiction between social expectations and my reality made me think about another fascinating inconsistency about college students in the States: college drinking. As teenagers leave their familiar surroundings, say goodbye to their family and friends and move away to college, they...
