Albano, all men are still somewhere or other pedants, the good in morality so called, and you especially. Maxims of Kant, great, broad classifications, principles, must they all have. You are all born Germans, real Germans of the Germans, even you, friend. Am I right? she added, softly, as if she desired a yes. No, said Albano, so soon as a man once pursues and desires anything right earnestly and exclusively, then he is called a coxcomb or a pedant. O you everlasting readers and readeresses! cried Julianne, stepping in and seeing him with a book in his hand. Never has the Princess read preface or note, said Linda, as I have never yet let any one go. Women who read prefaces and notes are of some significance; with men, at most the opposite were true. We can set out; all is ready, said Julianne. 112. CYCLE. When they came out into the festive world, how did the...
