America is in the throes of the Vietnam War. Great transitions are taking place not only throughout the country but also in the life of a young man named Phillip Robertson. This young man finds himself in trouble for a high school prank that is exposed to the authorities. He is expelled from a private prep school and has to accept a new beginning from his comfortable environs in the tony suburb of Chicago known as Barrington Heights. He is sent to live with a Great Aunt and Great Uncle outside a small town called Haskell, Oklahoma, in rural Oklahoma. He must learn to adjust from a pampered, upper middle class existence to life on a working ranch enduring hot, humid Oklahoma summers. This is a story of Phillip's journey in finding new meanings to family, faith and friendship as he experiences a new world he never dreamed existed or thought he would ever become a part of as a teenager. He meets all sorts of small town personalities that expand...
