Excerpt: . . . performance of certain tasks ( Department of Defense DoD , 1999 ). It could even allow use of actual system controls in responding to or manipulating instructional content. Additionally, both TRADOCs IMI descriptions and FCS documentation link IMI and ET: ET for FCS will include IMI materials as one of the three components, and ET is cited as one of the logical delivery systems for IMI-based training ( FCS-LSI, Force Development, Build and Sustain, in preparation ). Sensors and Visualization for Future Forces The decision to conduct research on a BCV 101 training program was prompted by consideration of the operational expectations for Soldiers manning Future Force combat vehicles 2 and other systems for the U. S. Army. The ongoing transformation of battlefield systems posits a virtual fusion of humans and computers into a hybrid-networked system for command, control, and communications. This alliance of manned modules and ( initially ) semi-autonomous ground and air platforms will form a coherent, seamless, tactical force for mission accomplishment. Soldiers will be equipped with and trained to use sensors and beyond-line-of-sight weapons capabilities to attack and defeat enemy targets. The vision for transformation encompasses not only systems, but also operations. Future Force units equipped with FCS will deploy rapidly, engaging in entry and follow-on operations. Units at every level will be tactically employed in full-spectrum missions and will operate well beyond the capabilities of potential foes. As described in the Armys Field Manual ( FM ) 6-0, Mission Command, the Future Force concept of visualization is related directly to familiar concepts of reconnaissance...
