Excerpt from Daddy Dickenson: Character Sketch and Funeral Oration No apology is offered for the appearance of this booklet. While it is not claimed that it will add to the sum total of the world's literature, yet the purpose for its appearance - which is a worthy one - will be found in a perusal of its pages. I claim for it only the extemporaneous portrayal of the characteristics and attributes of one who had read deeply and understandingly of the book of life. Daddy Dickenson was the concrete example of the eternal truth that, even in the highly commercialized present - when almost everything is measured by the dollar - yet when we stop to think and take our bearings, it is the fundamental characteristics of faith, hope and charity personified in man which really count in the end. In the following pages I have endeavored to present to the reader the one thought that, even in the present, it pays to adopt the divine injunction Love thy neighbor as thyself, and weave it into the warp and woof of daily life, rather than to spend one's days chasing around after the silver dollar, and in worshipping at the shrine of the golden calf. Daddy Dickenson cared nothing for money; knew nothing of its value, in the dollar-maddened age in which we live. His thoughts and actions were altruistic; to behold the smiles of gratitude and appreciation on the faces of those whom he favored, was pay sufficient unto him. To put into permanent record form for preservation, and to call the reader's attention to these great, almost divine attributes - hence this booklet. Done in...
