Despite advances in the quality of acute-care management of stroke and myocardial infarction (MI), there are gaps in knowledge about effective interventions to better manage the transition of care for patients with these complex health conditions. Transition of care is defined as a set of actions designed to ensure the coordination and continuity of health care as patients transfer between different locations or different levels of care within the same location, and is often provided by interdisciplinary teams of professionals. Indicators of potential transition problems include avoidable rehospitalizations and emergency room visits as well as poor functional status and quality of life. The first challenge of this systematic review was to consider the pathways for the transition of care. Transitions may include those that are direct to the outpatient environment as well as those to and from intermediate care environments. In addition, the components of transition of care may occur separately or in aggregate, which makes it important to know how the components are categorized and described within a clear taxonomy. The second challenge was to dissect those data relevant to the disease states of interest. The incidence of stroke and MI increases with age, as does the presence of other chronic conditions that may be driving downstream outcomes. Also, stroke and MI are not exclusively diseases of the elderly, so it is fundamental to explore stroke and MI transitions within the population as a whole as well as in the older or chronically ill population. While both stroke and MI result from disorders of the vascular system and as such share many common risk factors each medical condition presents unique challenges regarding transitions across care settings. Stroke patients more often transition from...
