Part II. --Objections To Its Abolition Answered. We will now endeavor to show the insufficiency of the objections urged against the repeal of the laws which sanction flogging in the navy. All injurious imputations upon those officers of the naval service who entertain different opinions, will be avoided with sedulous care. Should any harshness of judgment be expressed, it will be understood to apply to the acts of legislation, and not to the agents who have been designated to execute those acts. Opposition may come from some, who, instead of replying to arguments and to facts, will assail the motives of the writer. In fair combat and with lawful weapons, we do not mistrust the issue of the conflict; but where a feeling of personality exists, the advocates of the relics of barbarous times may resort to the mode of warfare of barbarous nations, and trust rather to the venom of the shaft than the vigor of the bow. At all events, we will discuss the question without passion or violence. In the language of an eloquent friend of the cause, Mr. Brown, of Philadelphia, we will advocate this thing temperately, but firmly. Virtue never accomplishes her object by storm; vice always resorts to it. We are not for breaking down the system in spite of the law; but we are for reforming the law, and abolishing the soul-sickening and degrading sight of a man tortured by the application of the lash. In the discussions...
