Excerpt: . . . of same; Fig. 4, an enlarged front elevation of one of the end shoes for the cutter-head, and Figs. 5 and 6 side elevations of same. As represented in the drawings, the inclined elevator or railway A (of which only a short portion is shown) is of a form commonly used for raising cakes of ice to the house in which they are stored, and on which the cakes are moved by means of endless chains that are driven by any suitable motive power; but, while it should be understood that said chains are used in this apparatus, they form no part of my invention, and are therefore omitted from the drawings. B represents guide-frames for the cutter-head of the planing device, which are erected on the string-pieces a of the inclined elevator. Said guide-frames may be made of angle-bars that are arranged so as to form parallel slots b, which are preferably fixed at right angles to the upper line of the elevator; but they may be established at any other suitable angle. The angle-bars at the opposite sides of the slots b are held together by clamps b, and are supported in position by the braces I12. C is the cutter-head, which consists of a cross-plate, 0, having at each end a. shoe, D, by which it is held at an acute angle to the plane of inclination of the elevator. Said cutterhead is provided with a series of chisels or cutters,...
