Excerpt from Economics for Executives: A Series of Twenty-Four Reading Texts Which Constitute an Interpretation of the Underlying Principles of the Economics and Business for Men and Women in Practical Life Panics, crises, and depressions have occurred at intervals in every important country of the world ever since the Industrial Revolution. In 110 years the United States has had fifteen of them. They have brought with them every kind of financial and economic distress, affecting business men by turning profits into losses, affecting investors by curtailing interest and dividends, and affecting wage-earners by creating widespread unemployment and suffering. Upon each of these occasions great numbers of people have been unable to buy the products of others because they could not sell their own, and a state of unsatisfied needs existed on the one hand against surplus supplies on the other. It is not strange that under these conditions people should be prompted to impatiently declare that there must be something fundamentally wrong with the organization of society.
