Excerpt: .The day and hour when letters are delivered to the prospective patron may insure or defeat their careful perusal. Many business houses consider Tuesday afternoon the best time for general letters to be delivered. At homes, either city or country, Saturday afternoon is looked upon as a favorable time. As a rule, letters of this nature which are delivered to retail merchants on Saturday are hopelessly lost, and the expense incident to such effort becomes a needless waste. Here again we see the opportunity for the exercise of sound judgment and the importance of it as an element in the motive back of all action in finding the patron. Directories. When a new edition of a mercantile agency-book, a telephone director, a general or trade directory, or a state gazetteer covering the territory operated by the salesman, comes from the press, it will pay...
