Following is an excerpt from Book #1 The Summer Before. AAAAGGGGHHHH! I could hear my mother screaming from the direction of the living room as I lay in my bed half asleep. Who would do such a thing! she continued to scream. I went from my half asleep stupor to wide awake almost instantly. I sprang out of my bed and ran into the hallway heading towards the living room and the direction of all of the noise and commotion. When I arrived in the living room there was my mother standing in the open front door to our modest house, with her hands on her hips as she looked intensely out the wide open doorway towards the street in front our house. I was taken back for a moment because from my vantage point where I was at to the back and left of Mom, her silhouette made her look like some crazy woman out of one of those action adventure horror movies. I proceeded cautiously and moved in alongside my Mother so that I could see out the front door...
