Even the most perfect wisdom and goodness is dependent upon and impelled by the so-called lower faculties of animal feeling, emotion, desire, and the influences of environment and intellect, and not upon any higher human capacities, because we do not possess any; or, if we do, their existence remains to be proved. Infinite wisdom and unlimited truth are largely synonymous with each other and are consistent with the idea of omnipotent, omnipresent, infinite, and eternal causation; and the wisdom typified by the arrangement and working of the universe is the most comprehensive example of goodness. The most valuable effect of wisdom is goodness; goodness or virtue consists in doing the greatest good to all men, one s self included. The most independent and fearless man is he who has sufficiency of virtue, wisdom, knowledge, and money. In consequence of our extremely...
