Maybe one of the following situations applies to you: * You are just starting out in the world of work but find that a college degree is required for most of the jobs that pay a decent wage. * You are sick and tired of being laid off or having your hours cut back. * You are chronically unemployed. * You hate your current line of work and want to change careers. * You are a recent retiree who realizes those Social Security checks won't provide you with enough money to pay basic bills. * You have a real hunger to become wealthy. You may have chosen real estate as your first career. If so, that's great! You will make decent money and you won't ever have to put up with the landmines involved when you work for somebody else. It is likely, however, that something painful has happened to you in your journey that led you to consider real estate as a career and you now feel the need to take control of your own financial welfare by working for yourself. Many people start this career late in life. They have learned that sometimes it is best to think outside the box and do something different from the norm, especially when whatever was normal for them can no longer be relied on to pay the bills. No matter what motivated you to consider reading up on how to become a real estate agent, you just know that it is time to make a change for the better! You are smart to consider real estate as a career! It is commonly known that real estate is where some...
