Trafford Publishing, Canada, 2007. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .We were approaching the island about noon. I was stretched out on the front bench of the pontoon boat, in a feline position with my eyes closed. I resembled a woman totally engrossed in sunbathing, without a care in the world. The truth of the matter was that my mind as well as my stomach was in turmoil. Fred left the launch and skimmed through the back bay. Our conversation had been easy and filled with laughter, as though the time when we had lost each other had not existed. The repeated humiliations, my illness, divorce and subsequent years, had been momentarily erased. The evolution of self-improvements, growth and ultimate maturity had made me secure and respecting myself again. Then as the boat left the back bay and entered the narrow river, the tips of Fred's ears turned a bright red. Immediately I remembered the old familiar signal that he was about to lie. I waited and watched for his jaw muscle to start jumping and sure enough, in a matter of minutes, the facial dance started. I looked in the direction of his silent stare thinking, He doesn't realize that I know where Stephanie (one of his latest sordid mistakes, that was supposed to be over) lives. My God, he's twisting his whole body around trying to identify the man in her yard. HE STILL CARES ABOUT HER! After all of his protesting, all of his apologies. DAMN he's still a deceitful bastard. Why can't I get it through my head that sometimes a tree is just a tree? By the time his gaze finally returned to me I sat up on the bench and shook out...
