Farmers and Friends: I stand before you at your Societys invitation, feeling the full force of the criticism which denies to one of my habits and pursuits capacity to instruct farmers as to their own especial vocation. Shoemaker, stick to your last! is a sound though sometimes misapplied admonition, and there is great strength in the natural presumption that every man can see a little farther UN his own proper pathway than can be seen by any one else. I fully realize and cheerfully admit that any one of you, who has devoted the last twenty or thirty years to Agriculture, must know very much more concerning it than I, who abandoned it at fifteen to master and pursue a most exacting, mechanical and intellectual vocation, and have since been able to. snatch but here and there an hour from a constant pressure of imperative duties and oppressive cares to revive the memories of my youth...
