Excerpt from Bulletin of Sweet Briar College, Vol. 21: Faculty Publications, Papers and Addresses, 1937-1938 An address delivered before the High School Conference at the University of Illinois, Urbana, Illinois, November 5, 1937. It is an exceedingly difficult task to tell whether schools are fitting persons for their roles in the present social order. In the first place there is not agreement on what is intrinsic and what is accidental in society; nor on what is the individual's place in society; nor on how much influence schools have in any final position an individual may take. If we consider young women, we must add to this a long standing belief, or supposition if you prefer to call it so, that women have a special place in society and we have a question so large and so vague that it is only possible to posit some characteristics for both society and women and tell in a tentative way whether schools are moving in that direction - a qualitative analysis of their work with only inaccurate quantitative indications. And yet the task seems worth trying that we may know what to emphasize, what to drop, a little better in what proportion to combine and, above all, how to approach what we do, that its validity may not be negated by poor achievement. What is a young woman's place in present-day society? First we recognize her as a thinking, feeling, acting individual, with the same need for clear, disciplined, effective thinking as men have. There are large areas in which men and women are alike, practically exactly alike, and this is an likeness which I see more and more as I grow older. The...
