CLIMBING MOUNTAINS

Wild Child Publishing, United States, 2014. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 224 x 148 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .When Sarabjit Parmar signed up for a Creative Writing and Media Writing degree course at the University of Derby, she knew it wouldn't be easy. But she had no real idea of the size of the mountain she was about to climb. Enormous odds, indeed, were stacked against her. Luckily, she decided to keep a detailed diary from the moment she rolled her wheelchair into her very first lecture . . . and that diary now tells the honest day-to-day story of the challenges she faced and overcame. It's an inspiring tale. Sarabjit- Sarbs to family and friends- has been dealing with a muscle-wasting condition known as Facioscapulohumeral Muscular Dystrophy since birth. She ran and played normally as a young child, but has been in a wheelchair since her early teens. She cannot smile or frown. And she has a speech impairment. A wheelchair accessible taxi took her the 30 miles to university on that first day . . . and Sarbs still remembers quaking with fear and anxiety as she joined the other newcomers. How on earth was this venture going to work out? The diary- Climbing Mountains -tells exactly how it worked out. Good days, bad days, boring days, happy days, sad days. Thousands of words written and re-written. Getting slightly tipsy in the Student Union bar, the fear of being stuck in the lift, the gazing out of classroom windows, weeping a few tears during the final lecture. Graduation drawing ever nearer, time alternately dragging or slipping past like lightning. And finally the Big Day, when dad drove to the university with mum, one brother and one sister for the degree ceremony....
