THE PATRICIAN, VOL. 4 (CLASSIC REPRINT)

Forgotten Books. Paperback. Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. 610 pages. Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 1.2in. Excerpt from The Patrician, Vol. 4 The reign of Edward III. forms the most martial and chivalrous period of English history. On the roll of the military worthies it produced - and the brilliant category includes Edward the Black Prince, Audley, Chandos, and Manny - few names stand more prominently forward than that of Sir Hugh Calveley of Lea. Froissart's romantic pen commemorates with graphic force the achievements of the Cheshire knight, and it is indeed observable that the old chronicler rarely touches on Sir Hugh without placing him in the very foreground of his living pictures. The family from which this renowned warrior sprang, was a branch of the ancient House of Calveleg of Calveleg, in the Hundred of Edisbury, which is traced to Hugh de Calveleg, who became Lord of Calveleg in the reign of King John by grant from Richard de Vernon. The first Calveley of Lea was David de Calveleg, (2nd son of Kenric de Calveleg of Calveleg,) who obtained a grant, temp. Edward III. , of the lordship of Lea, in the Hundred of Broxton, Cheshire, previously a part of the extensive possessions of the Montalts and the Montacutes. He married twice: by his first wife Johanna he appears to have had four sons; the eldest of whom, Sir Hugh Calveley, succeeded to Lea, and was the celebrated soldier, whose achievements have rendered the name so familiar to the historic reader. He first appears in the public events of his time as one of the thirty combatants who, in 1351, engaged, in mortal strife, an equal number of Bretons, for the purpose of deciding some differences which had arisen out of the disorders committed by the English after...
